

The story behind our Walnut Oil

Cold-pressed in The Netherlands

Virgin & roasted variants

From orchard to bottle

In the vast orchards of Moldova and Romania, tall walnut trees grow. As summer turns to fall, their ripe nuts drop gently to the ground, ready to be gathered by local farmers. After cracking and sorting, the valuable kernels begin their journey north, to our own production facility in Zaandam, The Netherlands.

Pressed in The Nederlands

At Sigma Oil Seeds, we value transparency and quality. That's why we press some of our oils, including walnut oil, ourselves. Since 2021, our facility in Zaandam houses two specialized production lines: one for organic nut oils like walnut, and another for specialty seed oils such as black cumin. This allows us to closely monitor the entire process and ensure the quality, purity and traceability of the final product.

Oil with purpose

Our virgin walnut oil is cold-pressed and gently filtered, preserving its natural richness in omega 3, vitamin B, and vitamin E. We also produce a roasted walnut oil variant, where the nuts are lightly heated before pressing, resulting in a deeper aroma and flavour, perfect for cold dishes like salads. But walnut oil is more than just a culinary delight. Thanks to its soothing and nourishing properties, it is also a popular ingredient in natural cosmetics and massage oils, making it ideal for dry or sensitive skin.

From raw material to finished product, we keep the chain short and the standards high. Pressed in The Netherlands, fully traceable and produced with care.

Exactly what you'd expect from the new generation of oil producers.
